24. When January of 1862 came, the 19th Tennessee Infantry took part in the battle of Fishing Creek. General Zollicoffer had made his winter quarters on the north bank of the Cumberland River. The Federals, under General Thomas, were not more than twenty miles from Fishing Creek. One bitterly cold January night the Confederates moved out to attack General Thomas. The rain and sleet fell in a steady downpour; the wind blew and howled. With firm tread and unflinching heart the Confederates marched toward the enemy. They hoped to surprise the enemy and to win a great victory.

25. Isabel Smith, while lying in bed, sick with tuberculosis, did not waste away. She studied and became knowledgeable in many areas. Perhaps one of her favorite history stories was John Rhea, Hero of Fishing Creek. Classic poems such as The Rime of the Ancient Mariner must have kept Isabel's mind busy. She may have memorized the
